

Find a Book Using WorldCat

WorldCat is a database of library catalogs from around the world. You can access it at:

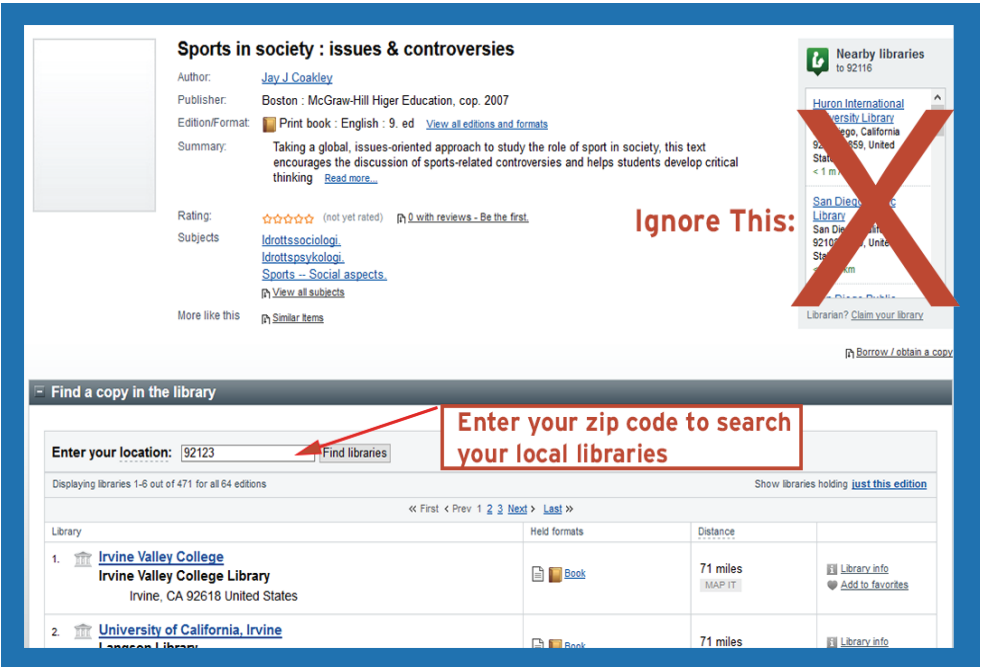

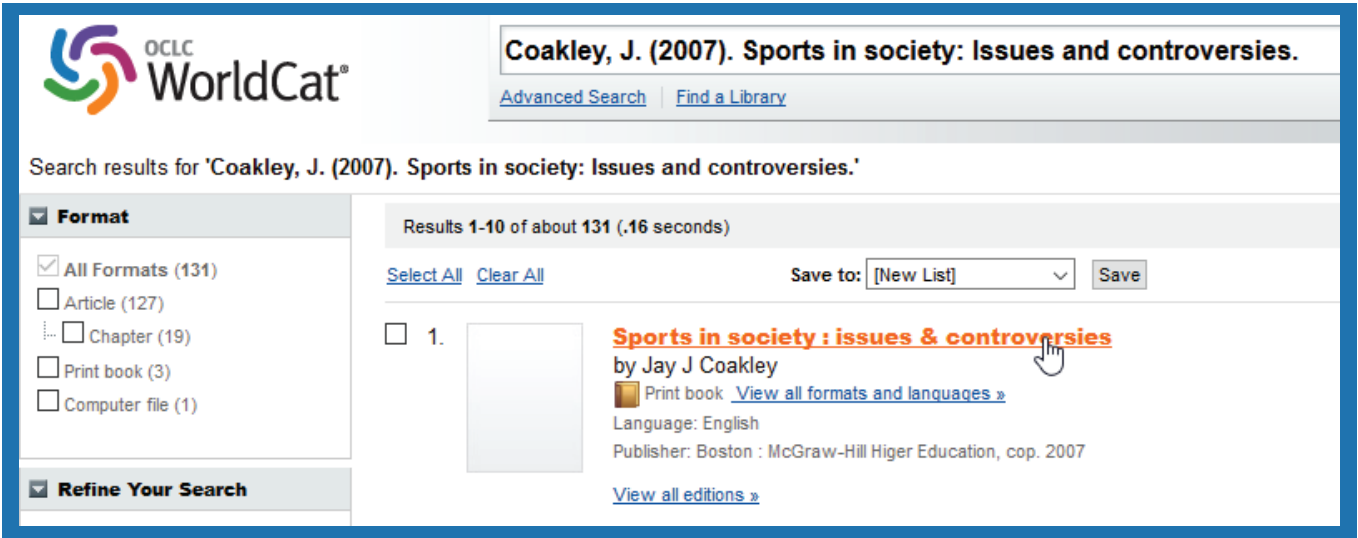

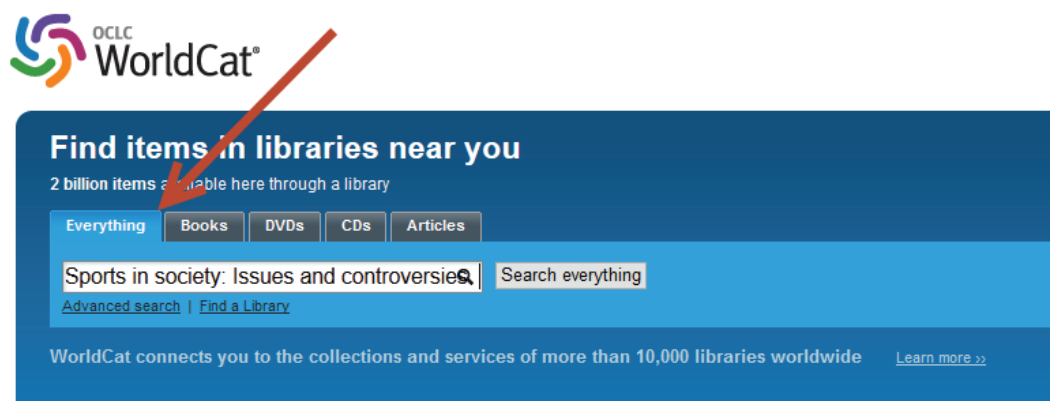

www.worldcat.org

Let’s say you are looking for the following book, but cannot find it within the library’s holdings:

Coakley, J. (2007). Sports in society: Issues and controversies. New York: McGraw Hill.

Generally, typing the title into the WorldCat search box will return your result. If that does not work, include the author name as well.

Enter your zip code to search your local libraries.

Before heading to your local library, we recommend contacting them to inquire about their lending policy. Most public libraries can place an Interlibrary Loan request for books that are not in their catalog. Contact your local library for additional information.
